

I have been registered with the State of Indiana for almost a year for telephone privacy. Our calls have drastically dropped and our dinner hour is now ours, instead of a series of house cleaning, magazine sales, or lawn care calls. I urge that the FCC not implement any proposal that would lessen Indiana's Telephone Privacy law that now protects us from the persistent, home invading calls. We used to get one or more calls every night. Now we get none. My daughter in Illinois gets constant calls and is urging that Illinois adopt similar laws. The FCC should do nothing to weaken what we now have in Indiana.
